Bibliography—secondary sources

Note: These citations are listed footnote-style (first name last name, etc.) and in chronological order by section, rather than in the style of a formal bibliography. So don’t use it as a model for the latter. For guidance on the footnote and bibliographical styles preferred by historians, consult the Chicago Manual of Style.

Note that this is a list of secondary sources. Throughout the semester, we will work to identify easily accessible primary sources that might be used in term papers. Some of these primary sources will be described during in-class discussions and student presentations.
